INGTON. AT JEFFERSON, TEXAS. The following memorial announcement of the death of Maj. Daniel A. Veitch, is from the Jefferson (Texas) Democrat, of which journal he has for some time been the associate editor. Many citizens of Lexington well remember the subject of fact, they could act more efficiently this sad notice. Says the Democrat of

Msj. Daniel A. Veitch, Associate Editor of the Democrat, died yesterday morning, at about 2 o'clo k, at the residence of Mr. E. E. Collins, two miles from the soity. In fading health, he had repaired to Mr. Collins' by invitation, confident of heing able to return in a few days and attend to his editorial duties, when he was suddenly attacked with flux, and after a brief illness expired.

We announce his death with heartfelt sorrow. He had many sterling qualities that endeared him to us, and to all who knew him; i capacious and well cultivated mind; a heart glowing with refined sensibility; a nature generous to a fault; an integrity that was unswerving; a high moral courage, that imparted an exalted tone to all his actions, and to that patriotism which added has tree to his character.

In Missouri, where he resided before came South, he had a host of admiring friends, and, as an evidence of it, he was three times elected Mayor of Lexington, in that state, over the most powerful and popular men of that city.
